

Wildcat Project Officer

Would you like to be involved in engaging communities in restoring one of Britain's rarest mammals? Do you have excellent communication skills and experience of stakeholder and community engagement, ideally in a wildlife conservation context? Could you be our Wildcat Project Officer at Vincent Wildlife Trust to support our joint initiative with Durrell Wildlife Conservation Trust and Wildwood Trust?

The Conservation Team has a track record of delivering ground-breaking projects such as the translocation and re-establishment of pine martens to mid-Wales, running the first project to build climate change resilience into bat roosts, and employing cutting edge social science techniques to develop consensus in potentially divisive carnivore reintroductions.

This role offers an unrivalled opportunity to develop a social feasibility study for the reintroduction of the wildcat into Wales, to promote knowledge exchange and to advocate our approach to mammal conservation more widely with our stakeholders and the public.

You will need to have a combination of excellent communication skills, stakeholder and community engagement, practical wildlife conservation experience and an understanding of Welsh culture and community.

The Trust offers a quality employment package, the chance for continued professional development and the opportunity to engage with your peers in Britain, Ireland and potentially abroad.
